DESCRIPTION: Scholarly, Student and Teacher Interviews, Archival Footage

This innovative documentary film addresses the most poignant issues concerning race and education in recent American history. Beginning with an overview of the efforts to establish public education for African-Americans in the 1800s, and the struggle of the NAACP and the Legal Defense Fund to desegregate schools throughout the 1900s, the film then addresses the state of public education today via candid interviews with students, educators and scholars from racially and economically diverse high schools, colleges and universities. Student, Teacher and Scholar interviews about contemporary issues dominate the Outreach Clip, which is not available for broadcast, but will be available to outreach personnel, educators, and organizations.
